This weekend, our teenagers (and some very fortunate adults) were brought together in the stillness and quietness of Camp Ney-A-Ti to consider what it really means to have a faith all their own. I was privileged to share with them some thoughts on what it means to "do your best" before God. It is important for us all to know that God expects more from us than merely wearing the name "Christian." God expects for us to daily put our best effort on display so that others may see it and glorify Him.

When is the last time you contemplated your "best" before God? Are you bringing your best to God when you come to this gathering? Is your best pouring out of you when you re-enter the world each day? The church needs (desperately) to seize control of the narrative surrounding Jesus Christ, His teachings, and what it truly means to be saved by grace through faith. We are required to put forth our very best, not so that we gain some measure of earthly recognition or reward, but rather so that the world can see our Lord and Savior.

Then and only then will the world truly know the "best."
