Every person has trials, every person has victories, and every person has periods of inactivity. There is not one person who can say that they have never experienced each of these seasons of life. However, it is what we represent in the midst of each season that can have a profound impact on those around us.

Am I re-presenting Christ in these moments?

Am I re-presenting old wounds, old attitudes, and old customs in these moments?

When things are going well in my life, am I boastful and arrogant, believing myself to be the sole cause of my success? Or do I give glory to God for His graciousness towards me and seek to pour that out into the lives of others?

When things are going poorly in my life and I am struggling, am I angry and bitter, believing myself to be the sole victim of life's mistreatment? Or do I pray to God for strength and courage while seeking out others in a similar position to lean on in these difficulties?

When I feel that things just are not moving, am I lethargic and lazy, believing that someone else should do something about my place? Or do I find motivation in the Word of God to strive for something more than the world?

Ultimately, the decision about how I am going to face each of these seasons will determine my attitude towards my fellow Christian. When they are struggling, am I someone they can turn to? When they are celebrating a victory, am I jealous? When they are feeling stuck, do I strive to motivate them towards righteous things?

Barnabas is a great example of someone who lived everyday trying to help other people and I firmly believe his account is left for us as a challenge for us to live the same way.
