I have never felt confident in my skills as a writer. I have always felt that things I write come off as cliché or disingenuous, so I have worked very hard over the years to try and improve my abilities as a writer. The reason it has been a struggle, beyond my own personal abilities, is that I feel that bulletin articles get lost in the shuffle very easily. People will get a bulletin, perhaps peruse the announcements, the ones on the sick list, and check to see if they have any responsibilities coming up. Yet, each week, someone writes a couple of paragraphs intending for the reader to move one step closer to the Lord, so even something like the bulletin article can be of great benefit to those who may be struggling with their faith, new to their faith, or never involved in faith before.

The bulletin reminds me a lot of church services. There has been and will always be some type of service emanating from this building, two days out of the week. Because of this regularity, we often joke about our 'saved' seats, our 'long-winded preachers', and the song leader who 'leads too many verses'. What is sad, though, is that often we speak the truth in jest. In this particular instance, we reveal the truth about our commitment when we ask questions like: 'But do I have to come?' 'Is anyone else going to be there?' or even 'Does it really matter if I study the Bible?' When we open the door to complacency, we must realize the danger that lies ahead.
