THIS MORNING: We are so glad that you are here! Thank you for gathering with this church family that meets here at Rogersville and we hope you will desire to be a part of this working family. This morning we look at something that sounds odd to the ear at first, but makes perfect sense when considered at a slightly deeper level.

Grief is a strange thing that everyone has to go through in their human experience, especially (it seems) for Christians. We feel an overwhelming sense of loss when someone passes away or a relationship ends and we are not certain how we will move one more step at times. However, we are encouraged by so many people to consider the spiritual aspect of loss and how it can lead to an even stronger faith. Therefore, it is strange to us because we can feel equal parts sad and grateful at the same time.

The grief spoken of in 2 Corinthians 7 is a grief that leads to the greatest thing we could ever dream of -- eternal life. This grief that Paul speaks about is a grief that wakes us up to remember what it was to be lost and shoves us forward to a place of salvation and redemption through the grace of God. I pray for all who hear this message today that you are moved to a godly grief over the sin you may be entangled in so that you can come to know the salvation of God before it is everlastingly too late.

TONIGHT: We hope you will join us tonight at 5pm for a period of singing! --Scott Wright
