When did we get to the point where we felt like we knew 'enough'? I know it's the natural thing to say that we are lifelong learners, but truthfully there comes a time where we openly believe we have learned enough. In that moment, what we are showing to the world is a belief that we are mature enough to do what we know, think what we think and deal with the consequences.

However, as all of us have found out, a person does not ever learn 'enough'. Instead, we take what we know, continually examine it and test it in hopes that we find it infallible and without blemish. This is the faith process -- hear, learn, apply, correct or strengthen, examine new questions -- and repeat these steps forever. A person desiring to grow closer to God will undoubtedly grow closer to others who desire the same thing. It is up to us to be the kind of faith seekers that will encourage others while we strengthen our faith.
