Church of Christ

June 28, 2026

There is an old story that goes like this -- An elderly man lived alone at the edge of a small town. Every evening, before the sun went down, he lit a lantern and placed it in his front window. For years, neighbors noticed the light but never thought much about it. One day a young boy asked, "Why do you light that lantern every night?" The old man smiled and replied, "Many years ago, I was lost in a storm. I wandered in the dark for hours until I saw a light in a window. That light guided me home. I promised myself that if I ever had the chance, I would leave a light shining for someone else." The boy thought about those words. The lantern was not bright enough to light the whole town, but it was bright enough to help someone find the way.

What if your example of Christian living was the lantern for someone else to find their way home? It changes our perspective about life when we begin to truly delve into the effect we have on other people and their direction in life. If our lives are merely straight lines that cross into other people's lines, then how does that brief interaction with us alter their line? Along that same thought, if our lives are lines that reflect multiple points and changes of direction, which interactions changed us for the better (a light in the darkness) and which interactions kept us from finding the pathway home?

"...let your light shine before others, so that they may see your good works and give glory to your Father who is in heaven." -- Matthew 5:16 -SW
